Historical source

Encyclopaedia Britannica scan, source row 1933. Parse 3.5 extracted the text. Super 3.5 VL corrected it from an enlarged crop of each block. It can still contain recognition errors. Page headers, footers, and page numbers are removed.

ORATORY (E0168)

ORATORY.

Election.

fready temper of the family. And fo in the pro- verbal exprestion: An ape is an ape, dress him ever fo fine.

When a word is repeated again with vehemence in the same sense, it is called epizeuxis. This figure shows the carefulness of the speaker, and his great concern of mind about what he says; and therefore has a na- tural tendency to excite the attention of the audience. It is suited to express anger, surprise, sorrow, and se- veral other passions. As when Cicero would express his indignation against Anthony for having been the chief instrument in bringing on the civil war, he says to him: You, you, Anthony, pulled Caesar upon the civil war. And thus he tells Catiline in his first invective against him: You live; and live, not to lay aside, but to pursue, your wicked design. And when our Sa- viour would express his great concern and sorrow for the wickedness of the Jews, he does it in this pathetic manner: O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who killest the pro- phets!

90

70

73

and your ancestors have undergone the greatest la-Blocution. boors?"

Epifrephe, is contrary to the former, and makes the repetition at the end of each member or sentence. As thus: Since concord was left, friendship was left, fidelity was left, liberty was left, all was left. And Cicero, in the charge which he brings against Mark Anthony before the senate, makes use of this figure, when he says, Do you lament the destruction of three Roman armies? The author of that destruction was Anthony. Do you bewail the loss of most emi- nent citizens? They have been taken from you by An- thony. Is the authority of this order weakened? It is weakened by Anthony.

Sympleces takes in both these left figures. As in that of Cicero: " You would pardon and acquit him, whom the senate hath condemned, whom the people of Rome have condemned; whom all mankind have con- demned." Here the several members both begin and end with the same word. We have a beautiful in- stance of it in St Paul, when he says: " Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I."

When a sentence concludes with the word with which it began, it is called epanalepsis. As in that expres- sion of Plautus, "Virtue contains all things, he wants no good thing who has virtue." The figure is the same, but the principle not so honest, in the advice which we find given by the miser in Horace, when he says, "Get money if you can, honestly; but however, get money." This figure adds a force to an expres- sion, when the principal thing designed to be conveyed is thus repeated, by leaving it fast upon the mind. And it heightens the beauty of it, when the sentence has an agreeable turn arising from two opposite parts. As in Cicero's compliment to Caesar: "We have seen your victory terminated by the war; your drawn sword in the city we have not seen." Hermogenes calls this a circle, because the sentence returns again to the same word, as that geometrical figure is formed by the orbicular motion of a line to the same point.

When the following sentence begins with the same word with which the former concluded, it is termed anadiplosis. As in the following instance: Let us think no price too great for truth; truth cannot be bought too dear. So in that passage of St John: He came to his own, and his own received him not. This figure generally fits best with grave and solemn dis- courses.

Epandos, is the inversion of a sentence, or repeating it backwards, so that it takes in the two last figures; for it both begins and ends with the same word, and the same word is likewise repeated in the middle. This turn of expression has a beauty in it, and shows a readiness of thought. We have the following example of it in Minutius Felix, where he is exposing the folly of the Egyptian superstition. "Isis (says he) with Cynocephalus and her priests, laments, bemoans, and seeks her lost son; her attendants beat their breasts, and imitate the grief of the unhappy mother; in a little time the son is found, upon which they all rejoice. Nor do they cease every year to lose what they find, or to find what they lose. And is it not ridiculous?

Source record

Scan ID `britannica:309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443:train:1933`

Image file `page-1933-ae507137e9dc.jpg`

Image SHA-256 `ae507137e9dccc05ea8a69ead38423f1107c58ffe3152883775f70afc1694223`

Dataset NationalLibraryOfScotland/encyclopaedia_britannica_illustrated at revision `309f765b1ecc83e0a7f7762e44b4a927a7555443` (CC0-1.0)

Extraction model `nvidia/nemotron-3.5-parse`, raw reply `extract/raw/page-1933-ae507137e9dc.json`

Raw reply SHA-256 `6a60416ba241a622c793a581445a491afcbb474611ceea6491ad57afe38b2bf8`

Correction model `nvidia/Nemotron-3.5-Super-VL`, block crops, raw replies `correct/raw/crop_nothink/page-1933-ae507137e9dc-b*.json`; parse_fallback: 3, super_vl: 10

Running header Part III.